West Farm

c. 1865

William T. West owned this farm in 1877 and left his initials and date (1872) carved in the barn. The main barn and farmhouse are the two mid 19th century structures on the property.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The West-D'Allisandro Farm c. 1850-1860 is a complex of two remaining buildings, the others having disappeared. The house and barn are all the remain of the complex. The house has been radically changed since its late 19th century beginning, however, the barn has remained basically the same, outside a few additions. The main gable of the house runs east/west and the primary facade faces south. The lane that leads to the house intersects with Route 222 just north of Kilby Corner.

The ^{STORY}2¹/₂ frame farmhouse has been radically altered. The main block of the house is L shaped, 4 bays across by 4 bays deep. The structure rests on an uncoursed stone foundation and is completely sheathed with aluminum siding. The medium pitched roof is covered with slate. There are two stuccoed brick chimneys located centrally and on either side of the peak.

A small 1 story gabled addition is found on the east gable end.

The south facade ^{CONSISTS OF} ~~is made with~~ 4 bays, the central two being entrances. One late 19th Century 4 panel door remains and has arched moldings in the top panels. The window sash is symmetrically placed and is a replaced 1/1 sash. The trim has been covered over with aluminum. The boxed cornice has also been covered over. A 20th century gable roof porch extends across the two entrance bays.

The west facade has been similarly treated with aluminum siding. All the sash windows have been replaced including the two that light the attic level. The eaves are not extended.

The north side is the inside section of the L plan. There is a cellar entrance in the east wall of the leg. The sash vary from a few 6/6 divisions to modern single pane sash.

The east gable end of the main block is only a half gable. The first floor level is covered with a single story gable addition, two bays across by one bay deep. It too has replaced sash and aluminum siding.

The interior contains a few hints of a late 19th Century origin. Fluted surrounds with corner blocks are found on a few door openings.

The barn is a typical rectangular form with a shed (raised) central entrance made accessible by a bank ~~with the second floor~~. Shed additions presently flank the forebay while continuing the main slope of the roof. The exterior is sheathed with boarding siding. The interior is a typical assortment of barn forms. Long wrought iron strap hinges with spade shaped ends are found on some doors. The initials W. T. W. and date 1872 are carved on the interior boards.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The complex does not retain much architectural significance other than the barn being approximately dated and in fairly good shape. The house has lost most of its exterior 19th century character. The farm is active and remains as a reminder of the influx of people in the mid to late 19th century in this general area.
